

Oklahoma Governor Slams Pagan Priestess' City Council Prayer

Outrage has been brewing online over a video of a “priestess of the goddess” delivering a pagan “prayer” during a Tulsa City Council meeting last week.

The independent media outlet, the Oklahoma Lion, released a video of the council meeting over the weekend.

“An unnamed Tulsa City Council Member invited a ‘priestess of the goddess’ to say what some are calling a ‘satanic prayer’ at the Nov. 20th Tulsa City Council meeting,” reads the caption.

Tulsa City Councilmember Crista Patrick is seen in the video actively participating and holding her hands up during the pagan invocation. However, it has not been confirmed if Patrick is the member who invited the woman.

According to her official Tulsa Council page, Patrick calls herself a “healer” of “wounded spirits.”

“Satan is trying to establish a foothold, but Oklahoma is going to be a shining city on the hill,” Gov. Kevin Stitt wrote on X. “Tulsa City Council needs to stand strong against actions like this, and Tulsans need to remember who allowed this at the ballot box.”

Satan is trying to establish a foothold, but Oklahoma is going to be a shining city on the hill.

Oklahoma State Superintendent Ryan Walters echoed that sentiment writing on X, “Satanic prayers are welcome in Hell but not in Oklahoma.”

“Satanism is not a religion,” he argued. “Tulsa should immediately move to ensure this never happens again and the person who allowed it should be held accountable.”

Worship leader Sean Feucht posted the video to X, and many of his followers are calling on the name of Jesus to counter any spiritual alignment with “dark forces.”

“In the mighty name of Jesus, I break the fruits of her words and witchcraft, I break all agreements with the dark forces she does business with, and I release order and light over that area because OUR God is a God of order, and a God of light. In the mighty name of Christ Jesus,” one person wrote.

Another responded, “I rebuke this satanic prayer and render it powerless over our nation. We claim our Savior Jesus Christ back over this nation and the gates of hell can not have her no longer. In Jesus’ name Amen!!”
