

Palestinian Has Nightly Dreams of Jesus, Repents of Hatred for Jews

Bassam Adranly grew up in a Palestinian, Greek Orthodox Christian family that never spoke negatively about Muslims or Islam but often criticized the Jews. In his '20s while a university student, Adranly became disenchanted with many aspects of his community's culture and turned to atheism.

But in 1995, Adranly had a powerful encounter with Jesus.

"Every night I was dreaming of Him, all night through," Adranly says. "Going with Him and His disciples everywhere. ... and all day through, I couldn't get His words out of my mind."

One of the first things God addressed in Adranly's life was his deep-rooted prejudice toward the Jews. Watch the video to find out what happened next.
