

Police Fire on Lockdown Protestors

Videos are emerging today of Australian police firing rubber bullets into crowds of COVID-19 lockdown protestors and the images are disturbing.

Dressed in full riot gear, Australian police can be seen marching in ranks and unloading their ammo of rubber bullets into the crowds.

People are running, screaming, and looking for relief from the onslaught they are receiving from the Australian authorities.

Rubber bullets, while considered non-fatal munition, leave horribly large pock marks and can cause severe cuts and bruises. Many protestors have posted images of their backs with half-dollar sized pock marks and bruises the size of oranges.

Others have uploaded images with their faces bleeding from catching a bullet above their eyebrows and having blood running down their face as a result.

The world is shocked right now by how tyrannical the Australian government has become in light of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Earlier this week, another video emerged of a 70-year-old woman being pushed to the ground and pepper sprayed in the face by a Melbourne police officer.

The Australian government seems to have forgotten who they are supposed to serve. The abuse and physical assault is all taking place under the pretext of "the common good" and "public health".

On the Continent of Australia, which has a population of over

25 million people, it was reported on Sunday , 535 new cases of coronavirus cases and one death. {eo}
