

Police Investigate After Doctor Performs Abortion on Wrong Woman

Police in South Korea have opened an investigation after a doctor performed an abortion on the wrong patient.

On Aug. 7, a woman who was six weeks pregnant went to a clinic in the district of Gangseo, in the country's capital Seoul, and because of a medical mix-up and a failure to confirm her identity, had her pregnancy wrongfully terminated, according to a report from CNN.

The woman had actually gone into the clinic for a checkup and a nutritional shot. But a nurse, who failed to check the woman's medical information, injected her with anesthesia and the physician aborted the wrong patient's unborn child.
