

Powerful Moves of Revival Sweep College Campuses

Jennie Allen has had a front-row seat to much of the revival unfolding across America, particularly among young people.

She's been speaking on college campuses and witnessing Gen Z's rising interest in faith and the Bible.

"It is so real," Allen recently told CBN News from the red carpet of the KLOVE Fan Awards in Nashville, Tennessee. "There's no hype. They actually are hungry for God. It's been the most beautiful thing."

Allen has seen massive college-age audiences hang on her every word as she shares the Gospel, with the fervor so strong at some schools she's found herself impromptu baptizing young people in the backs of pick-up trucks—or even in local creeks.

"They are responding to the Gospel," she said. "And they are showing up in droves. So, it's been super encouraging that this generation wants God."

Allen said she first noticed Generation Z's hunger in 2018 when she spoke at Texas A&M about sin, and the young audience immediately responded in a truly "special" way.

"They were hungry," she said, noting the intense interest wasn't lost on her. "They were willing to be honest; they wanted God."
