In shocking footage posted to social media, rain poured down into the New York City subway system. On X, conservative commentator Charlie Kirk shared a video where feet of water can be seen swarming down into the subway.

“Torrential downpour in the New York area is now resulting in extensive flooding in the NYC subway system. Wild video,” Kirk writes.

In a report by ABC 7, more eyewitnesses captured the unbelievable flooding on camera near 23rd Street and 28th Street on the line for the number one train. Footage showed water entering the subway car with people aboard.

New Jersey also experienced heavy flooding, leaving cars to drive in feet of water. The rushing flood waters closed down major roads like the New Jersey Turnpike, according to Times Now News. Governor Phil Murphy announced a state of emergency due to the seriousness of the situation.
