

What Message Will Former President Trump Deliver at NRB?

The 2024 National Religious Broadcasters International Christian Media Convention will be kicking off Feb. 20 and running through Feb. 23 in Nashville.

According to the NRB, this is “the world’s largest gathering of Christian communicators” and this year looks to be no different.

In a surprise press statement, the NRB announced that President Donald Trump would be addressing the convention on Feb. 22 as part of the NRB Presidential forum.

“We look forward to hearing President Trump express his vision for the future of our country in distinguished remarks at NRB Convention,” said NRB President & CEO Troy A. Miller. “Over the years, NRB Convention has been honored to host presidential candidates to speak directly to the community of Christian broadcasters on national issues of Christian concern. In this crucial year for our country, there is no better venue for these important conversations than the NRB Convention.”

As the NRB is a 501(c)(3) organization, they “neither support nor oppose any candidate for public office,” however no word has been released if any other eligible candidates, such as

President Joe Biden and former South Carolina Governor Nikki Haley, have accepted their offer to speak at the forum.{eoa}
