

President Trump's 'Doomsday Plane' Just Landed in DC: What Is Washington Preparing For?

Is Washington preparing for something big?

The Daily Mail reported that President Trump's plane, used for crisis response, made its way to Washington, D.C., this week. The plane, often called the "Doomsday Plane," is a Boeing E-4B used during times of peril. As the outlet described it is "built to survive a nuclear attack while coordinating military action."

Sounds scary, right?

As the Daily Mail noted, flight-tracking sites recorded the plane leaving Omaha, Nebraska, before it landed at Camp Springs near D.C.

While the flight's purpose is unknown, it could be due to anything from a training exercise to a routine schedule. The article further pointed out that the flight of this mysterious plane came right after Nicolás Maduro's capture.

For believers, events like these are more than just headlines—they are signals to pay attention. Jesus warned that in the last days there would be "wars and rumors of wars" and a world marked by upheaval, geopolitical shaking and rapid shifts that would leave nations unsettled.

The Bible doesn't tell us to panic, but it does tell us to discern the times. If Washington is preparing for "something big," then the Church should be preparing as well. Not out of fear, but to be ready for when Jesus finally returns.
