

Prophetic Red Heifers Spark Worldwide Attention: A Sign of the Times?

SHILOH, Israel – In September 2022, the arrival of five red heifers in Israel caught the world's attention. Now, more than two years later, those cows are being cared for in ancient Shiloh and continue to attract international visitors.

Larry Borntrager, a farmer from northern Indiana, takes care of them.

He told us, "My next point is to try to find a farmer who can make hay, which is, you know, the flowers and the leaves and everything stay on them. That way it's just better for the cow."

Borntrager admitted, "It's just a lot of fun to be involved in something that I see God is doing behind the scenes."

He says what he's experienced since arriving here is remarkable.

"While I've been standing here at Shiloh, every continent, countries I've never heard of before, were here to see the red heifers. There's something happening in Shiloh," he observed.

Borntrager also believes it's biblically significant.

"Ideas are becoming a reality. In other words, the idea of a red heifer has been in the Jewish understanding over a couple thousand years. But here at Shiloh, just like it says in Genesis 49, there's something happening here that's drawing the nations, and it's the red heifers.

In this area, Hannah prayed for a son where the prophet Samuel served the Lord and Joshua divided the land between the twelve tribes.

Moria Shapira identified it as "the place where many stories of the bible occurred. And today we also have here the red heifers, which is something new," she said. "The budgets for this visitor center stopped because of the war (with Hamas and Hezbollah). So we invite whoever wants to be part with us to help this very important thing of the red heifers."

During our visit, Bible teacher Dr. Todd Fink brought his group to see the red heifers. "Shiloh has so much significance," he said. "It was the spiritual capital of Israel for 369 years."

"This is huge. This is huge," he exclaimed. "And the one gal that we, that was giving us the tour, she said that part of the reason why Hamas invaded is because of these red heifers. And according to prophecy, these red heifers are significant. From the time of Israel's history, they say that only nine have been killed for these ashes. And so for these to be here, and Shiloh here, and for that to fit in with what appears to be prophecy on the horizon, we're living in monumental days, unbelievable times."
