

Ray Comfort Film Debunking Evolution Premieres Near Scopes Trial Anniversary

A controversial new movie that debunks evolution will premiere in Tennessee on Monday, almost 88 years to the day after the famous Scopes "Monkey Trial."

Titled Evolution vs. God, its producer, Ray Comfort, says, "Hollywood's 1960 movie Inherit the Wind was their own fictionalized version of the Tennessee-based Scopes trial, intentionally portraying creationists as simple-minded hicks who had blind faith in the Bible and rejected the evidence for evolution. But this new film is going to show that it is Darwinian evolution that rests on nothing but blind faith, and that it is bogus science."

According to Comfort, the film is essentially a second Scopes trial, putting evolutionary scientists from UCLA and the University of Southern California on the witness stand and challenging them to present evidence for the theory. The movie includes a statement by Professor Richard Dawkins about faith, which Comfort believes will "put a nail in the coffin of evolution."

"We haven't misrepresented the professors in the slightest but have just taken what they blindly believe and made it public," the producer notes. "It's going to show that the Emperor Darwin has no clothes. Evolution vs. God reveals, from the mouths of the 'experts,' that Darwinian evolution is not only unproven and unprovable but is unscientific. If you believe in evolution, prepare to have your faith shaken."

In just a handful of days, the new movie's trailer has already had more than 240,000 YouTube views, with thousands downloading the full pre-release version of the film. Ken Ham, founder and CEO of Answers in Genesis and the popular Creation Museum, says, "Evolution vs. God will rock the creation and evolution world!"

The Scopes trial, held in Dayton, Tenn., was decided on July 21, 1925. The world premiere of Evolution vs. God will be held Monday, July 22, one day after the 88th anniversary of the famous decision. Comfort will attend the film's premiere in Sevierville, Tenn., at the Answers Mega Conference hosted by Answers in Genesis.

Evolution vs. God will be released on DVD and YouTube on Aug. 7 and can be seen on .
