

Shocking Sexual Assault Coverup Allegations Lead Parents to Demand Superintendent's Resignation

Shocking allegations led to another heated school board meeting in northern Virginia Tuesday night, and now some parents are calling for a superintendent to resign.

A disturbing report of alleged sexual assault fueled the latest tension-filled school board meeting in Loudoun County, Virginia.

Outrage over a student, who was charged with sexual assault at two different school campuses, prompted parents to speak out against Loudoun County Public Schools (LCPS) making questionable accommodations for transgender students.

Local father Scott Smith told The Daily Wire that his daughter was sexually assaulted in a bathroom at Stonebridge High School back in May after a boy wearing a skirt entered the girls' bathroom.

Smith attended a June school board meeting where he voiced his concerns over students using restrooms that correspond with their chosen gender identity. He said the controversial policies being pushed by LCPS factored into the attack against his daughter.

He was arrested at that meeting and later found guilty of disorderly conduct and resisting arrest.

"If someone would have sat and listened for thirty seconds to what Scott had to say, they would have been mortified and heartbroken," said Scott's attorney, Elizabeth Lancaster.

Following The Daily Wire's story on the situation, more than 60 parents showed up to last night's board meeting to demand that the Loudoun County school superintendent resign.

"You guys failed. Sexual assaults happening in public schools is unacceptable and should never happen," said parent Linda Killen.

One mother questioned the school board's ability to safeguard children from harmful situations.
