

Shocking Way the Government is Getting Teens Into the Occult

For years parents have been asking the government to get out of their children's affairs. Now, the state of California just may have taken things too far.

According to Harbinger's Daily, the state of California is backing an app called "Soluna," targeting it for teens to use who have self-esteem issues.

This sounds decent enough on the surface.

Until you look deeper into what is really happening with Soluna.

As Harbinger's Daily notes: "One lesson is called 'Tarot and Tidings: a holiday spread to protect your peace.'"

This is terrifying.

Other features include discussions encouraging "high priestesses," homosexuality and polyamory. Teens in distress do not need demons, yet that is what the state of California is offering.

In a world darkened by sin and the false promises of idolatry, we are called to shine the light of Christ, illuminating the path of truth, grace and redemption. During these wicked times, we must boldly reflect His light, speaking truth in love, living out His righteousness and extending His mercy to those trapped in deception.
