

Song, Dance, Inspiration Flow From Bethel's First Full-Length Film

Chloe Vassallo is so energetic and vivacious that she stars in Bright Ones, which is Bethel Music's first feature-length film.

The story follows teens at a California performing arts school as they wrestle with identity, legacy and more.

And while the movie has been described as “in the vein of High School Musical,” there's one notable difference: the Holy Spirit.

“We would all pray together before we start anything,” Vassallo says. “Just to honestly get the Presence in the room. I feel like when you don't get the Presence in the room, people can sort of feel awkward. And He's the Prince of Peace. He really comes and calms everybody's nerves, and it just goes with ease.”

So what else was happening on set? How well do the stars actually know each other in real life? Listen to the podcast to find out, and see Bright Ones when it dances into theaters on April 22. Get your tickets here.
