

Surgeon Who Performs Gender Transitions Warns of a Disturbing Trend

As culture becomes more accepting of transgenderism, a doctor is warning that there's a related issue that reportedly has an unfortunate stigma among some in the medical community: the decision by some people who have undergone reassignment surgery to reverse course.

Dr. Miroslav Djordjevic, leader of the Belgrade Center for Genital Reconstructive Surgery in Belgrade and a staff member at New York City's Mount Sinai Hospital, recently told The Telegraph he has seen an uptick in the number of people seeking reversals.

Djordjevic, who has performed gender reassignments for the past decade, also said that many of those exploring reversals weren't properly given psychiatric screening before their surgeries and urged his fellow medical professionals not to badger them over their decision to turn back, The Daily Mail reported.
