

Texas Man Removed from School Board Meeting For Reading Provocative School Library Book

A Texas man was removed from a school board meeting last week after reading excerpts from LGBTQ sexually-laden book, "Flamer," which has been available to children in that area.

As soon as the man reading the contents of the book read the explicit content, he was asked to stop talking by the board.

In a video on X posted by Carlos Turcios, you can hear "Thank you, sir," only 14 seconds in from when the citizen started reading on page one.

Shortly after that, security came over to escort the man out as other citizens filmed with outrage.

"Hey, don't touch him!" One man yells. "He didn't break the law."

As soon as the man was taken out of the room, others reasserted that he had done nothing wrong and that he had the constitutional right to speak as they followed him and the officer out of the room.

The book read to the school board was one of the most banned books of 2022 according to the American Library Association.

Its sexually explicit content targeted at children has made it extremely controversial.

This incident comes after other parents across the nation have tried to stand up against indoctrination in school libraries and curriculums. Pastor John Amanchukwu discussed other explicit books that have been circulating in public schools in North Carolina. In a viral speech, Amanchukwu convicted school board members about the obscenity inside of these books as he read the vile words out loud.

“If you don’t want to hear it in a school board meeting, why should children be able to check it out of the school system? Amanchukwu asked. “We have perverts that are perverting our kids, and you all sit back smug in your chairs, but you don’t want me to read you don’t want me to read the filth because it exposes the truth.”

Amanchukwu believes this kind of dark agenda can only be exposed as long as parents are willing to stand up and fight for what they know is right.

“It’s going to take, number one, parents understanding that you do not co-parent with the government,” Amanchukwu said on the Strang Report.

As these occurrences become more frequent throughout the nation, it’s important to remember that we must stay vigilant against all forces of evil that try to trap ourselves or our families into ideologies that will lead to us moving away from the mercy and goodness of God (Ex. 34:5-7). {eoa}
