

‘The Voice’ Judges Sing ‘Hallelujah’ in Memory of School Massacre Victims

The judges of America’s The Voice came together to remember the victims of the Connecticut school massacre by singing a poignant rendition of “Hallelujah” during the opening of the talent show on Monday night.

Christina Aguilera, Blake Shelton, Cee Lo Green and Adam Levine led this season’s finalists in a moving version of the classic Leonard Cohen song at the beginning of the latest episode. They performed the track in a darkened studio surrounded by candles, with each member of the group holding a placard emblazoned with the name and age of each of the 26 people who lost their lives at Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown on Friday.

The show’s host, Carson Daly, and Social Media Correspondent, Christina Milian, also joined in the performance. Suspected gunman Adam Lanza allegedly killed 20 children and six staff members, and is also believed to have killed his own mother earlier on Friday—before turning the firearm on himself.

Copyright 2012 – WENN

Click below to see the video of the moving performance.