

This is What Could Happen If There's No Gold at Fort Knox

What would happen in America if there's no gold at Fort Knox?

In a recent and sobering broadcast, Glenn Beck issued a dire warning concerning America's gold reserves. As Donald Trump continues to uncover a wide range of government corruption and waste that has been ongoing for decades, conservative commentator Glenn Beck is warning why President Trump needs to make it to Fort Knox, and what could happen if there's no gold at the depository.

Fort Knox has been synonymous with American financial strength. However, concerns have mounted over the lack of transparency regarding its actual contents. If the gold is gone—or significantly depleted—America's financial system could crumble overnight. Such an event would not only trigger hyperinflation but also weaken the country's global standing, making way for the rise of a centralized world economy—something many Bible scholars associate with the coming of the Antichrist.

A House Built on Sand?

Jesus warned of building a house on unstable foundations (see Matt. 7:26-27), and many believe America's financial system has been doing just that—printing trillions of dollars backed by nothing but trust. If Beck's warning proves true, and the gold reserves are missing, that trust could evaporate in an instant, leaving America vulnerable to foreign adversaries and financial collapse.

“Gold still undergirds our financial system,” Beck says. “Our trust in government begins with the gold.”

Beck also warns that not only would the financial system no longer be trusted, but that it would create pandemonium.

“It would be over for us overnight if there was no real stockpile of gold. It would melt down the entire global financial system and destroy whatever remaining credibility the FED and the dollar might have on the world stage,” he says.

Now more than ever, it is time to steward our resources wisely, be mindful of economic deception and, most importantly, draw closer to the Lord.

Could Fort Knox’s mystery be another prophetic warning?

If so, we must be ready.
