

Trump Extends Ceasefire as Iran Hardliners Hold Parades

President Donald Trump extended the ceasefire with Iran that was due to expire on Wednesday night. The president pointed to what he called a “fractured” Iranian government and raised questions about who is really in charge in Tehran.

Just hours after the Trump announcement, the Iranian Revolutionary Guard Corps (IRGC) rallied supporters with a parade that included ballistic missiles in the heart of the capital. The demonstrators chanted, “Strike the final blow, and hit the heart of Tel Aviv.”

The Associated Press reports that the IRGC also fired upon two ships in the Strait of Hormuz on Wednesday.

Iran’s state-run television quoted a military spokesman who threatened the United States.

“In the event of aggression and any action against Islamic Iran, the armed forces of the Islamic Republic of Iran will immediately attack the predetermined targets with power, and teach the aggressive America and the child-killing Zionist entity another lesson more severely than before.”
