

Trump Says Gaza Ceasefire Holding Despite Hamas Attacks, IDF Soldier Deaths

JERUSALEM, Israel – President Trump insists the Gaza ceasefire between Hamas and Israel is still holding, despite a Hamas attack this weekend. However, some believe the plan could be in danger of falling apart.

The Israel Defense Forces announced they had resumed the ceasefire on Sunday evening after a Hamas attack killed two IDF soldiers and wounded three more in the southern Gaza Strip. Israel retaliated with dozens of strikes against Hamas terror targets.

The president said on Fox News Sunday that there isn't a timeline to disarm Hamas.

"Not a timeline, not a hard line, but we're going to see how it all works out," Trump stated. "They've lived there for a long time. They're very violent. You understand, you've been covering it for a very long time, but we're gonna find out. "So it's not a hot timeline, but it's a line in my own mind. And at a certain point, if they don't do what they're supposed to do, then we'll have to do it for them."

Trump Envoy Steve Witkoff and advisor Jared Kushner are in Israel seeking to preserve the deal.
