

University Prof Gives Extra Credit for Answering This Question About Donald Trump

As Christmas approaches next week, millions of students are recovering from the chaos of finals, anxiously checking grades, hoping their professors added in extra credit to give their GPA a boost.

It's not unheard of for a professor to lob an easy question into the final exam, aiding brain-fried students with the gesture of good will.

But at Nebraska's Creighton University, one professor asked a question with one right answer, or so he says.

According to Hypeline, English professor Fidel Fajardo-Acosta wrote:

Donald Trump is:

- a) a fool
- b) already in hell
- c) a clown
- d) all of the answer choices for this question are correct
- e) an evil man
- f) the Anti-Christ

That's not exactly the soft ball students want to receive. So far, the "right answer" has yet to be reported to media.

According to Rate My Professor, though, "easiness" isn't one of Fajardo-Acosta's strengths. The professor averages a 3.2/5 in the category.

However, the average student does consider him helpful and says he provides clarity, with both scores hovering at 4.3/5.
