

Was This Financial Summit a Prelude to a One-World Government?

✖ Those who don't believe a one world government is coming in the near future may want to reconsider.

In late June in Paris, French President Emmanuel Macron welcomed 50 heads of state, representatives of NGO [non-government organization] and civil society organizations to Paris for the "Summit for a New Global Financing Pact." The name of the event alone indicates discussion to rest the international financial system with a continued push toward a 2030 agenda of "net-zero" goals.

The French government touted the event as a way for nations to fight poverty and climate change. But one of the other stated goals of the summit was to transform the entire international financial system by adapting the International Monetary Fund [IMF] and the World Bank to modern challenges, reported.

Attending the summit was US President Joe Biden, German Chancellor Olaf Scholz, British Prime Minister Rishi Sunak and Brazilian President Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva, among many others.

In addition to those mentioned above, the summit was organized with support from Open Society Foundations, the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation and the Rockefeller Foundation.

UN Secretary General Antonio Guterres called for a "new Bretton Woods moment," which references the 1944 international agreement that established rules for governing monetary relations among independent states. That requires each nation to guarantee convertibility of their currencies into US dollars.

A One-World Government: Utopia or Hell on Earth?

IMF Managing Director Kristalina Georgieva had previously called for a “new Bretton Woods moment” in October 2020.

reported that NGO’s are “proposing various forms of debt forgiveness for developing countries who have the dual task of repaying loans from developed nations and banks, such as the World Bank.”

The website also reported that the “New Global Financing Pact’s” goal is “Building a New Consensus for a More Inclusive International Financial System.” It includes key milestones for both 2023 and 2024.

Macron, Biden and others all commented that the transition to “net-zero” and goals of the Paris Agreement “present the opportunity to ‘unlock a new era of sustainable global economic growth.’”

Stephen Strang Says There is Only One Thing Resisting A One-World Government From Emerging

The Summit of the Future is set for September 2024 and, according to its website, the summit is a “once-in-a-generation” opportunity” to address gaps in global governance.”

’s Derrick Broze wrote, “I encourage all readers to pay attention to the SDG Summit of his year and the Summit of the Future in 2024. I believe we will see major steps toward the creation of a one-world government between now and then.”

Broze says the “Predator Class may use the threat of a looming pandemic, or climate crises, or even threats from beyond our world, but the goal is the same: complete control and cataloguing of all human life. We must resist these plans at the local level if we have hopes to prevent The Great Reset from becoming reality.” {eoa}
