

White House Turns Into ‘a House of Prayer’ as Faith Leaders Mark First 100 Days with Worship Event

President Donald Trump’s first 100 days in office have been marked by sweeping changes and the fulfillment of campaign promises, such as stemming the tide of illegal immigration, cutting wasteful government spending, and enacting legislation that protects women and girls in sports.

And as his second term has rolled out, Trump has not minced words when it comes to faith, taking steps to show that this administration will be one that honors the Lord.

Breaking News. Spirit-Filled Stories. Subscribe to Charisma on YouTube now!

From opening his first cabinet meeting with prayer, to issuing a bold faith-filled Easter declaration, to holding a White House staff worship service during Holy Week, to establishing the White House Faith Office closer to the West Wing, the president has displayed his faith as a “beacon on a hill.”

Similarly, the White House marked the upcoming conclusion of his first 100 days in office by inviting nearly 100 faith leaders on the grounds to pray and worship Jesus.

Wow.

Faith leaders chillingly give glory to God by singing worship songs at the White House.

Jesus is Lord. ☐☐

– Anna Lulis (@annamlulis) April 26, 2025

//

Trump's longtime personal pastor, Paula White-Cain, and Jennifer Korn, who worked in the first Trump administration, invited the group of faith leaders and pastors to gather at the White House over the weekend.

Jesus is being lifted up TODAY at the @WhiteHouse □□□□

*The prayers of millions across the world are truly changing this place! Today it has become a house of prayer!
#LetUsWorship*

– Sean Feucht (@seanfeucht) April 25, 2025

“Jesus is being lifted up TODAY at the White House,” wrote worship leader Sean Feucht on X on Friday. “The prayers of millions across the world are truly changing this place! Today it has become a house of prayer!”