

Worker's Prayer Over President Trump Goes Viral

This is the real @realDonaldTrump the media won't show you!

Amidst all the media pundits, analysts and various experts trying to find ways to “fix” America, one worker in Columbia, South Carolina, showed the world that true change will come from faith and prayer.

At a stop in a local Zesto restaurant in Columbia, South Carolina, former President Donald Trump stopped by during a campaign stop.

When asked by the former president if she would recommend the food there, she answered “Yes sir,” followed by “Do you care if I pray for you?”

“Go ahead,” Trump responded who then took the worker’s hand in prayer and laid his hand on her shoulder. Other employees present joined in the prayer for the former President as the video ends.

While not a long video, it garnered almost 4 million views by Monday afternoon and shows a side of Trump the media will not show willingly.

There are still many people, many Christians, who wish the Lord’s will to be done in America, and believe that He is still using Donald Trump to achieve His goals and His purpose for the country.

While public faith in polls have nose-dived ever since the 2016 election, a large number of “mainstream” polls show Donald Trump with a commanding lead over all other Republican candidates.

One thing is for certain, if more citizens took the time and sent up genuine, heartfelt prayers toward heaven that God's will be done in America, repented with sincerity and stood on the principles of the Word of God, it would have a great impact upon the leadership of this nation. {eoa}
