

A Prophetic Warning for After the Election and 2025

As millions of people flock to the polls for Election Day, we must also take a spiritual inventory of what the results will mean for America's future.

Recently, Jeremiah Johnson shared both his official statement on Donald Trump, and a vision that he had regarding the future of our nation.

After publicly repenting for missing the mark on the 2020 election, Johnson has made it clear that he is not prophesying about who will win the election this year. However, he has shared an urgent message to the church about what could follow after the next president is determined.

"In October, I received several dreams where millions of people were wandering in a desert in search of thirst. Kamala Harris began to build a gigantic mirage, enticing people to keep wandering for water that was never there until they perished," says Johnson.
