

Amanda Grace Issues Urgent Dream Warning About Candace Owens

Prophetic voice Amanda Grace is urging Christians across the nation to pray fervently for political commentator Candace Owens after sharing what she described as a deeply troubling dream she believes serves as a spiritual warning rather than a prediction.

In a recent video, Grace recounted dreaming that Owens had died, saying the experience carried an overwhelming sense of urgency and left her convinced that believers should immediately begin interceding for the conservative commentator.

"I perceive from the Lord when these dreams are given, it is a warning to intercede and pray for that person so the outcome changes," Grace said. "The effectual fervent prayers of a righteous man do indeed avail much."

Grace stressed that she does not view prophetic dreams as declarations of an unchangeable future but as invitations for God's people to pray before tragedy occurs.

According to Grace, the dream centered around hearing that Owens was dead and experiencing an overwhelming feeling that "it's too late." She described an atmosphere of panic and urgency surrounding the announcement.

Beyond the imagery itself, Grace said she believes Owens has entered a spiritually dangerous season.

“You need to pray for her safety right now,” Grace urged. “You need to intercede and pray that she actually hears the voice of the Holy Spirit in the middle of the company of noise and very heavy influence that is around her.”

Grace further claimed Owens had “walked herself into” her current circumstances, suggesting unresolved emotional wounds and decisions made outside God’s leading had left her vulnerable to spiritual attack. She also warned that the period between July and September is particularly significant, saying she believes “the enemy is looking to take prey right now.”

While Grace’s message is rooted in her personal account of a dream and reflects her own prophetic interpretation, her central appeal was not directed toward political debate but toward prayer.

“Whether you like her or not, that doesn’t matter,” Grace said. “We don’t pray for people we like only.”

She reminded viewers that Scripture calls believers to pray even for those with whom they disagree, emphasizing mercy, intercession and unity within the body of Christ.

Grace closed her message by encouraging Christians to remain spiritually alert and to place their confidence in Christ rather than in fear.

“The enemy may be looking to take prey... however, Jesus Christ is far greater,” she said.

Throughout Scripture, dreams have occasionally served as warnings or calls to action, yet believers are also instructed to “test the spirits” (1 John 4:1) and weigh prophetic words carefully (1 Thess. 5:20-21). Regardless of how one interprets Grace’s dream, her appeal ultimately points Christians toward a biblical response: praying for others, seeking God’s wisdom and trusting the Lord’s sovereignty in uncertain times.
