

Calling Our Nation Back to God: Will It Take a Crisis Like Ukraine in US?

Amid Europe's bloodiest post-World War II conflict, evangelical churches in Ukraine tell a story that boggles the mind.

In the nation's war-ravaged occupied territories, more than 120 churches lie, destroyed. Their pastors have either been killed or fled for their lives.

Elsewhere in Ukraine, though, new churches are springing up, filled with individuals and families asking, "'Is there any real hope here?'"

At a time when Americans' interest in attending church is at an all-time low, Ukraine is experiencing a revival born out of calamity and crisis.

In recent months, as hunger for the gospel spreads, some 7,000 people have been baptized in Ukraine's evangelical churches. Evangelical seminaries and Bible colleges are full, training 2,000 enthusiastic, young undergraduates. In the past year alone, about 300 new Ukrainian pastors were ordained.

Contrast those numbers with what we see happening in America.
