

Could the Final Pope Be Here? Prophecy and Papal Power Collide

The Vatican is mourning the death of Pope Francis, who passed away on Easter Monday at the age of 88 due to respiratory failure. Yet even in death, his legacy—and the timing of his final moments—is stirring up a prophetic storm, not least in the form of the St. Malachy prophecy.

Just hours before his passing, Pope Francis surprised the world by making a brief appearance at Easter Sunday Mass in St. Peter's Square, delivering an emotional blessing to the faithful. Behind the scenes, U.S. Vice President J.D. Vance made an unannounced visit to meet privately with the Pope. While the contents of that meeting remain undisclosed, its proximity to the Pope's death adds a layer of mystery—and perhaps divine timing.

Jonathan Cahn's Prophetic Alarm

For years, Pope Francis sparked controversy with reforms that some praised as progressive, while others, like New York Times best-selling author and prophetic voice Jonathan Cahn, issued grave warnings. Over a year ago, Cahn said the Pope was leading the church away from biblical foundations.
