

‘Craving the Truth’: The Shocking Spiritual Hunger Sweeping Gen Z

Naomi Anderson is on a mission to point Generation Z toward the truth.

Anderson is co-founder of Verity Collective, “a movement rooted in the unchanging truth of the Gospel.” She told CBN News she wants to bring Jesus to America’s young generation.

“We believe that there is a lot of confusion and noise in this world for them, and we want to bring them back to the one and only truth, which is Jesus,” she said.

Anderson believes young people are “craving the truth” but have faced an uphill battle in understanding it, as they’ve been sold an improper understanding of reality.

“They are craving the truth. They just don’t know what it is because they’ve been told to define it for themselves,” she said. “So when we ask them, ‘What is truth?’ they literally will sit there on camera and it will take them minutes to try to decide right because they have been told truth is objective – you can define your own truth. ... They just need to be pointed back to the truth.”

The need for truth couldn’t be more pressing, as many young people are suffering from mental health issues, including anxiety and depression.
