

Did the Trump Prophets Get It Right After All?

It was all the rage back in 2020. A chorus of prophetic leaders announced with assurance that Donald Trump would be reelected and serve a second term in the White House, but he did not—at least, not in 2020. Now that he has been reelected, resoundingly at that, does this mean all these prophets were right after all? Certainly not.

First, some of the “prophets” (I will let God decide their true status and calling) said Trump would serve eight consecutive years. They were dogmatic, clear and aggressive, even after the 2020 election results were announced. “Watch and see” they proclaimed, but nothing happened.

Second, after Biden’s victory was announced, the prophets predicting his reelection doubled down. Many said he did win the election, but it was stolen from him.

But that begs the question: If Trump would win but actually lose, why didn’t God reveal this to them too? This would be like me giving you a prophetic word that a rich man would give you a Porsche next week, free of charge. I just failed to tell you it would be carjacked on the way to your house, and you would never see it.

Others doubled down by saying, "In the coming weeks, the results will be overturned and Trump will be declared winner," with some even offering specific timetables in which this would take place. Despite their guarantees, none of this happened—not in a single instance or court case..

Others claimed a coup would occur and Biden would be removed from office. It would happen right after the inauguration. Or in March. Or April. Or August.
