

Here Are the Keys to Discerning 3,000-Year-Old Prophetic Warnings of Judgment

The resurgence of debate over Israel's place on the world stage couldn't be more timely. As global tensions rise and "Jew hatred" headlines increasingly dominate the news cycle, Pastor James Kaddis reminds us that "something inconceivable happened thousands of years ago. And as a result, a prophecy was given that affects us today." His warning rings especially loud amid modern political disputes over Israel's sovereignty and the alarming uptick in antisemitism worldwide.

At the heart of Kaddis's message is an urgent call to personal engagement with Scripture. He argues that "no understanding of the Bible in general and no real time to study Bible prophecy" has left many ill-equipped to discern current events.

Instead, he urges believers to "dig deep. It's be aware of. It's study. It's learn. It's discern. It's understand what God is saying in the moment, in the hour," insisting that firsthand knowledge of God's Word is essential in a world awash with opinions and half-truths.

Underlying today's headlines is the same ancient promise God made to Israel, which Kaddis illustrates by quoting 1 Chronicles 17: "I will plant them, and they shall dwell in their place, and shall be moved no more." He stresses that if God were truly "done with Israel the way people say," then "Christianity...would be a worthless lie."
