

Hobby Lobby Founder's 'Miracle' Granddaughter Pulls Through Successful Emergency Surgery for Cancer

Hobby Lobby founder Steve Green's granddaughter, Zion, underwent emergency surgery today for a cancerous tumor.

Zion's parents, Michael and Lauren Green McAfee, found out their daughter had a tumor in her liver less than two months after adopting her.

The McAfees have been keeping their followers updated on social media, asking for prayers throughout the ordeal.

"Zion just came out of surgery – praise God," Lauren wrote on Facebook today. "Praise God, the surgeon said it could not have gone better. Praise God. We know this is because of the thousands and thousands praying for her. Her life continues to be a miracle. She will have a while of recovery so we are still in the midst of waiting for pathology, recovery and finding out [if] chemo is necessary. Please pray for her comfort and quick healing. But we are so grateful the big surgery went so well and they got all of the tumor out with comfortable margin."
