

Jonathan Cahn Rebukes Candace Owens on Antisemitism: 'Turned to the Dark Side'

In a newly released video, bestselling author and Messianic rabbi Jonathan Cahn addressed what he sees as a troubling shift in conservative commentator Candace Owens' public statements toward Israel and the Jewish people. Cahn challenged her rhetoric, calling it "the oldest hatred in the world" repackaged for the internet age.

Owens has recently accused Israel of being a "cult nation," where she claimed that Jewish refugees after the Holocaust were "pretending" to be refugees, and repeated conspiracies linking Jews to global control. She has also questioned the legitimacy of Zionism, dismissed Israel's right to its ancestral land and invoked the centuries-old "blood libel" myth that Jews engage in ritual murder—a false accusation Cahn called "psychotic." Cahn notes that Owens has "...increasingly turned to the dark side."

Cahn tied these narratives to biblical prophecy, particularly Revelation 12, which describes a "woman" (Israel) under attack by the "dragon" (Satan). He argued that to slander or attack Israel is to align oneself with that dragon's agenda. "Do you want to be on the side of Satan against God?" he asked.

Cahn also dismantled specific claims. Regarding the Star of David, which Owens called a cultic "hexagram," Cahn explained its origin as a six-pointed geometric shape—"hexa" being Greek for “six”—and not occultic. He noted that by her logic, any nation with a five-pointed star on its flag would be guilty of occult symbolism, including the United States.
