In 2010, Clement gave a word in Detroit that seemed to expose the spirit behind President Obama's administration. He spoke of manipulation, betrayal and false alliances: "They shall say, 'We have a friend in the White House.' But the Spirit of God says, 'It is deception. Do not be fooled by the words and smiles, for the enemy has crept in through a Trojan horse.'"

Kim Clement further rebuked the idea of placing trust in government as a source of provision or power. In a prophetic word, he declared, "You have said, 'Government, you are our God. Government, you are our provider.' But I say, 'No!' I shall break the bondage of this dependency and raise up voices that shall say, 'God alone is our source!'"

In light of newly unearthed documents implicating Obama was part of a post-election sabotage operation against Donald Trump—Clement's words ring louder than ever. Donné Clement Petruska, Clement's daughter, noted, "My dad never had peace about Obama. He always said something wasn't right. But he called the church to pray, not panic."
