

The Secret Israel Prophecy: The Deeper Truth Behind God's Plan

For thousands of years, both the Jewish people and Christians have played a vital role in God's plan. Yet the Bible reveals they are far more connected than many realize.

Below is an eye-opening excerpt from Jonathan Cahn's The Book of Mysteries, a work that peels back the veil on truths hidden in plain sight. In this passage, Cahn takes us on a journey through a quiet canyon, where two flocks converge under the watchful care of their shepherds—a striking metaphor for one of the greatest mysteries of God's plan.

We were watching a shepherd leading his flock through a long canyon when we noticed a second flock and shepherd descending the bordering hills to join them. The two flocks then converged as one.

“Two peoples of God,” said the teacher, “have shared this world for the last two thousand years: the children of Israel, the Jewish people, and the followers of Messiah, the Christians, the church. For most of that time they have been at enmity with each other, each seeing the other as an alien presence. But the two are joined together in a mystery. Messiah is the Shepherd of Israel. But He is also the Shepherd of those who follow Him from all nations, the church. So He told His Jewish disciples: ‘I have other sheep that are not of this pen...’”

“So the church and Israel are two flocks. . . yet with the same Shepherd...Messiah.”

"But the mystery goes even deeper," said the teacher. "In the Book of Ephesians it is written that the one who follows Messiah, the true Christian, has become a fellow citizen in the commonwealth of Israel. Thus the two are joined together. The church is, in reality... a Jewish entity. It doesn't replace Israel, but complements it. The church is, in spirit, Jewish. It is the Israel of Spirit. What the Jewish people are in flesh and blood and in the realm of the physical, the church is...in the realm of the spirit. To the one people belongs a Promised Land of earth; to the other a Promised Land of heaven. To the one belongs a Jerusalem of mountains and stone; to the other, the Jerusalem above. The one is a people physically gathered out from the nations; the other, a people spiritually gathered. The one is born of the promise through flesh and blood; the other, born by the Spirit. The one constitutes the family of Messiah of flesh and blood; the other, His family by spirit. The one reaps a harvest of fruit and grain; the other a harvest of eternal life. And as the spirit is joined to the body, so the two are by nature intrinsically bound."

"But the two have been separated," I said.

"Yes," said the teacher, "to the detriment of each. But the consummation of the one will not come without the other, nor the fulfillment of the other without the one. For when the spirit and the body are separated, it is death. But when the spirit and the body are again united, what is it?"

"Life," I said. "It is life from death."
