

Tomí Arayomí and Katie Souza: A Prophetic Warning for 2030

With 2025 just on the horizon, many people may not be thinking about what's coming in 2030. However, what if God has given us a warning we should heed?

In a recent video with Katie Souza and Tomí Arayomí, the two discussed the prophetic implications of why we need to be thinking ahead to 2030.

Arayomí says that the idea of us needing to build a “Goshen” right now first came to him in 2020 when God told him a very specific message.

“In 2020, the Lord said ‘Tell them you have nine years left,’” Arayomí recounts. “I believe that after 2030 the world is going to change dramatically.”

Arayomí says he believes this will be more than just an agricultural famine, but rather a famine that will affect many facets of life.

“I’m talking about a famine of credit, a famine of banking, a famine of heating, lighting, electricity,” Arayomí says. “And the Lord spoke to me that what is considered money is going to go through another believe we’re shifting into 2030 into another season of ‘what does money look like?’ And around the world that’s going to be different for different places.”

Arayomi believes the need to build a Goshen, a net of security, isn't just a call for individuals, but for government leaders and nations as well.
