

400 Lives Touched Through Pastor's Prayer Station Ministry

An 82-year-old Louisiana pastor is seeing his unique ministry yield “great dividends” as he has single-handedly reached more than 400 people with the Gospel of Jesus Christ by ministering to them at a busy intersection.

He told Baptist Press his church had struggled to reach people and bring in new members, but he recently got an idea on how to share the hope of the gospel with the small community.

“I’ve done a lot of door-to-door and prayer walking over the years,” said Fogleman. “One day, I was standing out by the corner of the church I pastor now, and it’s probably in the top two or three busiest intersections in our parish.”

He decided to set up a prayer station at the intersection.

He set out to create signs and even built a cross to attract people.

Fogleman has faithfully sat or walked near the road three days a week for a couple of hours a day.

“It’s just something the Lord gave me,” Fogleman said. “It’s the best ministry I’ve ever had in my life.”

So far, he has had 440 people stop and ask for prayer, and baptized 11 people last June.

“I have people who honk at me and wave at me,” he said. “I bump into people all the time who tell me they’ve seen me out there. It's a solid witness to a lot of people."

Now, a small pavilion with benches hosts people waiting to hear encouragement from the roadside minister.
