

Biden's Anti-Life Bill Would Use Taxpayer Money to Fund Foreign Abortions

In a massive show of pro-abortion support, the Biden administration has moved to allow U.S. funding of abortions overseas, overturning the Mexico City Policy, which prohibited federal funds from going to foreign-aid groups that perform abortions or provide related services.

Biden has also expressed a desire to overturn the Hyde Amendment, which bars taxpayer dollars from being used for abortions except in limited cases.

Pro-life conservatives are appalled at the turn of events and are urging those opposed to pray and take a stand. "People of faith have got to lock arms and push back," says Penny Nance, CEO and president of Concerned Women for America.

Jeff Hunt, director of the Centennial Institute, says in a news release, "In the midst of a pandemic where Americans are suffering, we're going to take taxpayer dollars to fund the unconscionable practice of abortion in other countries. By reversing the Mexico City Policy, the Biden administration is making it clear that abortion-to-birth is their policy—and American taxpayers will be stuck with the bill."
