

Dog the Bounty Hunter: God's Reality Amid Miracles

Duane Chapman, more commonly known as Dog the Bounty Hunter, is known for chasing down criminals. But he's also on a mission to help people discover the Gospel.

Chapman, author of the new book "Nine Lives and Counting: A Bounty Hunter's Journey to Faith, Hope, and Redemption," told CBN News he was brought up in a Christian home by a praying mom.

"I knew more than most people did, right from wrong, miracles of God – I knew all that," he said, noting, though, that he got a bit off track at one point. "I went to prison in the '70s."

Chapman and three accomplices reportedly broke into a man's home in a search for marijuana. One of his accomplices shot and killed the man during a struggle. Chapman was sentenced to five years and served 18 months.

After his jail time experience, Chapman was released and righted his wrongs, becoming a bounty hunter. He launched on his path to a career that inevitably landed him with the show "Dog the Bounty Hunter," which aired new episodes from 2003 to 2012.

Chapman, who has certainly had a plethora of success, has also had his share of heartbreak.

His wife, Beth, who joined him on his TV adventure died in 2019 after a cancer battle. He's since remarried, and he's been on a journey of strengthening his faith alongside his wife, Francie.

"I know God is absolutely real," Chapman said. "I know that God told me years ago ... 'I'm going to show you miracles beyond [anything] that you could imagine, think, or want.'"
