

Ex-Lesbian Shares How God Broke the Chains That Held Her in Bondage

This weekend's Freedom March saw dozens of former members of the LGBT community come together in Washington D.C. and praise God for how He set them free. Among them was Fatina McCray, a former lesbian who is now a wife and a mom. McCray says she was sexually abused multiple times in her childhood and on into her early 20s. "I felt ... men had betrayed me, men had hurt me, and that's something that really pushed me to the other side, toward same-sex relationships," McCray says in an interview with Ashley Little.

But nothing is too big for God. See her testimony in the video.
