

Jonathan Cahn: How to Tap into Daily Supernatural Power from God

It's easy to get settled in life—set routines, habits, limits and expectations. Routines aren't inherently bad, but they can become barriers. The life of the Spirit cannot be contained by walls, schedules or comfort zones. In a powerful message, Jonathan Cahn, a prophetic voice, warned that if we rely solely on these habits, the river of God cannot flow.

Ezekiel's vision of the river flowing from the temple is a powerful illustration of this truth. In Ezekiel 47, water is seen pouring from under the threshold of the house toward the east. Cahn explains, "The house in Hebrew... It's not just a house. It's the house. The house is the house of God." Jerusalem, the city of God, had no natural water supply, depending entirely on heaven. This reminds us that as God's people, we are not to rely on circumstances, people or the world, but on Him alone.

The river in Ezekiel's vision begins small, ankle-deep, but grows as it flows. "He measured a thousand cubits... the water was around my ankle. He measured another thousand cubits... now it was reaching my knees. Another thousand... it was high enough to swim a river that could not be crossed," Cahn recounts. Eventually, the river transforms everything in its path, even bringing life to the Dead Sea.

This imagery shows how God's Spirit can revive the dead and bring life where there was none. Scripture reinforces this principle: Joel 3 speaks of a fountain springing from the house of the Lord, Zechariah describes a fountain for cleansing in Jerusalem, and Revelation 22 presents a river of living water flowing from God's throne.

Even the temple—the house of God—cannot fully contain His presence. “Even the house of God cannot contain the presence of God... Even the greatest ministry cannot contain the presence of God,” Cahn notes. When life or church becomes rigid and routine-focused, it creates walls that prevent God's river from flowing.
