

Key Charismatic Leaders Bring the Fire as Thousands Cry Out to God in Promise Keepers Reboot Event

Key charismatic leaders Pastors Carter Conlon, Robert Morris and Samuel Rodriguez as well as James Robison made a dynamic impact at the reboot of national Christian men's organization Promise Keepers this past weekend at the AT&T Stadium in Arlington, Texas, with nearly 30,000 men in attendance and even more participating online.

Geared to include "worship that strengthens the soul, brotherhood that lasts a lifetime, and tools that empower you to be the man Christ intended you to be," the two-day event included worship led by Cody Carnes and Tauren Wells.

Twitter filled up with comments from attendees as well as from faith leaders about the event. Robison, longtime television host and founder of Life Outreach International, posted about "Kingdom power, life and purpose":

I shared at Promise Keepers in AT&T Stadium on Saturday that although the disciples did not understand the Kingdom here and now, at hand and in us, they left the Upper Room filled to overflowing with Kingdom power, life and purpose!

Rodriguez, president of the National Hispanic Leadership Conference and pastor of New Season Church in Sacramento, California, also shared his excitement over the way "God's precious Holy Spirit filled the stadium":

Glory to God!!!

I had the God ordained blessing and privilege of preaching today at AT&T Stadium in the great state of Texas for Promise Keepers. Forever grateful as God's precious Holy Spirit filled the stadium.

Thank you @kenrharrison you are simply the best.

Founded in 1990 by former University of Colorado football coach Bill McCartney, Promise Keepers is a movement that encourages men to be Christ-like leaders for their church and community. The massive men's events from the '90s had waned until the movement began making an online comeback in 2020 during the pandemic.

Founded in 1990 by former University of Colorado football coach Bill McCartney, the Promise Keepers movement stopped for a season but made an online comeback in 2020. Despite efforts from the left to cancel the event because of CEO Ken Harrison's biblical views on sexuality, the movement appears on the upswing after this successful event.
