

Muslim Woman Faces Honor Killing, Finds Hope in Jesus After Hearing This One Word From Heaven

Muslim-background believers in Jesus Christ are telling miraculous testimonies of how they found true hope and salvation after years of pain and searching under Islam.

In a series of testimonies called Souls & Stories provided to CBN News in partnership with , they're explaining how Christ made Himself known to them in supernatural ways.

Aisha was born in Amman, Jordan, to a strict Islamic family. Her father abused her verbally and said things that should never be said to a daughter, but her religion was not a source of peace for her during those painful years. Instead, she felt constant condemnation from Islam.

When Aisha and her family moved to the U.S., she was desperate to be loved, and she got pregnant at 17. She knew her father was obligated by Islamic culture to kill her for dishonoring her family. Fearing for her life, she decided to get an abortion—a shame she carried for many years to follow.

In Islam, “her sins were unforgivable,” and she had been taught that she was “hated by Allah.” Suffering from depression and suicidal thoughts, she searched relentlessly for forgiveness and hope. One day as she cried out to Allah for mercy, that’s when she heard an audible voice say one word: “Jesus.”

After hearing that voice from heaven, Aisha turned her prayers to Jesus asking Him to reveal Himself to her.
