

New Faith-Based Film Highlights Spiritual Battle, Future of America

Moms for America®, a national movement calling on moms to restore values such as motherhood, marriage, womanhood and patriotism, urges everyone to view the powerful new documentary, Leaders for Life.

“Not only does this film clearly outline the spiritual battle raging in our society today,” says Moms for America founder and president Kimberly Fletcher, “but, most importantly, it shows us where the answer lies.”

The film “vividly exposes the spiritual warfare that is occurring in a manner never seen before,” according to the film’s synopsis.

Featuring powerful interviews with Moms for America’s advisory board member, Sam Sorbo, her husband, actor Kevin Sorbo, and other notable people of faith, the film is directed toward Christians—especially moms and pastors.

“This is a crucial time right now in our country to share the film’s message,” says Fletcher. “The future of America is at stake, and we need to give our kids a chance.”

Amidst the backdrop of our country’s latest violence, the movie’s trailer poses the poignant question “How do you save a nation from itself?” The answer, found in the movie, is that if people don’t value life, they will get violent; if they forsake the value of human life, violence is inevitable.
