

Sid Roth is Bringing Jesus to Times Square

Amid the violent crime, economic instability and spiritual drought taking place in America, what the country could use some more of is hope.

This is why Sid Roth, host of “It’s Supernatural with Sid Roth” is going to do whatever it takes to get the word out about Jesus and his love for Him to a world that badly needs Him.

In the days leading up to Memorial Day, Roth and his team at “It’s Supernatural” and Messianic Vision will illuminate Times Square in New York City with an evangelistic video ad right in the heart of the city at Broadway and 43rd.

The message will be simple: “I’m JEWISH and I LOVE JESUS.” It will be joined with a QR code people can scan with their mobile devices to take them to Roth’s website with testimonial videos sharing the gospel message.

Located right next to the Good Morning America studio, the advertisement will shine the name of Jesus on all who pass by it through the end of August.

The world is experiencing significant spiritual warfare these days, and we are able to see this taking place through the evil practices that are becoming mainstream and accepted by society.

But in the face of this adversity, we need more Christians like Roth we are willing to take the name of Jesus to the very “crossroads of the world” in Times Square, and shout out that He is King of kings and Lord of lords for the whole earth to hear.
