

The Gap Between Where You Are and Where You Want to Be Is a Decision Gap

Most people are one decision away from a different life.

Not one opportunity. Not one connection. Not one lucky break. One decision. The decision to stop waiting for conditions to improve before they start moving.

Here's what I know: people who are waiting on more money, more time, more clarity, more support. They'll still be waiting five years from now. Because the conditions never get perfect. And the people who built something didn't wait for perfection. They decided.

This day. Not when it feels right. Not after the fear goes away. This day.

The gap between where you are and where God is calling you isn't filled with resources. It's filled with decisions you keep deferring. Every day you don't decide is a vote for staying exactly where you are.

Today: identify the decision you've been avoiding. Make it.
