

The Invitation

Dear Saints,

As I sat before the Lord, I was taken into a vision of a room in the centre of what was a very large and grand table. The table was magnificently structured and beautifully polished, and it seemed as though its surface was one that would not be marred or scratched regardless of what was placed on it or what it was required to handle. Truly, this looked like a place of government and its atmosphere had an indescribable weight and authority.

The room had many doors aligned with the different sides of the table. All of a sudden, an alert sounded, signaling that a door was about to open. The door opened and a man came in and took a seat at the table. As he sat, other doors also began to open around the room and other people came in and took their places too. At first they were looking at each other as though they had never met before, but as they sat together you could feel their hearts connect. Now they looked at each other with a recognition that each of them had been on a journey to arrive at this place and that they had come to a truly strategic moment.

As they convened and exchanged at the table, a Spirit of peace descended on them, and I could see strategic messages and instructions being written and released to people across the nations, gathering according to a divine purpose. I then heard the words of Zechariah 4, speaking of God's anointed ones being raised to serve His purposes in the whole earth. The invitation to come to this table is not about human preferences but is about what God is doing in this hour. It is not about man's point of view but is about how, from God's perspective, the streams are being brought together and journeys are converging to unlock the promises for the season ahead.

Prayer: “Abba Father. In Jesus’ mighty name, I declare every divine door set before me is secured, according to Psalm 147:13.

I declare that I walk in favour and multiplication, according to Psalm 147:19.

Amen.”

The time for harvest is here! {eoa}
