

What Preacher Jack Hibbs' Political 'Spies' Are Telling Him

While many preachers are hesitant, if not fearful, to speak their mind from the pulpit about today's cultural and political issues, Jack Hibbs certainly is not one of them.

Hibbs, the senior pastor of Calvary Chapel Chino Hills in Chino Hills, California, says he has proof that the citizens of that state are being duped about a bill Democratic lawmakers are trying to pass that would prevent them from doing just about anything in public without proof that they have received what he says are "flawed" vaccines.

Hibbs says he has an impact team that "literally hunts down bad ideas" in the legislature in the state capital of Sacramento. "It's beautiful to say that we have spies. It's true, the other team doesn't know who the spies are," Hibbs says in the video above.

Earlier this week, the Los Angeles Times reported that Democratic lawmakers have dropped the controversial bill, but Hibbs isn't convinced that the issue is dead in his state, or in any other state in the country. The Los Angeles Times reported that California Gov. Gavin Newsom said he "will consider subsequent actions to impose additional vaccines mandates as needed to help protect Californians from new variants," and Assemblywoman Buffy Wicks said she "she will not purpose the proposal this year after drafts of her bill language were leaked last week, saying she needed more time to craft 'the strongest bill possible.'"

"If this is so good, then why hasn't anyone in the White House received the vaccination?" Hibbs says. "This is vitally important, and I am filled with righteous anger. This is the government that you and I are living under. You are being duped ... across the United States. ... How can anyone support the Democratic Party with their views? Don't come to me with your feelings. Come to me with your facts."
