

What's the Answer to Raging Political Violence in the Nations?

Read Time: 1 Minute, 21 Seconds

I've had several prophetic words on political violence come to me in recent months. I can't shake it, especially after seeing the vice president of Argentina narrowly escape an assassination because the would-be-murderer's gun jammed.

It seems political violence is roaming about beyond banana republics and darker nations where the gospel meets with heavy resistance. Political violence is brewing in Europe and America—and if we don't take a stand in the spirit, I believe it's only going to get worse.

That's not what anybody wants. Or at least that's not what we say we want.

Indeed, 85% of Americans disagree that it is acceptable for a member of their political party to threaten and/or intimidate others to achieve a political goal, according to a recent Reuters/Ipsos poll.

Yet, this continues to happen.

Eighty-three percent also disagree that violent acts are acceptable in order to achieve their idea of a better society. Additionally, 85% of Americans do not believe it is acceptable for someone in their political party to commit violence to achieve a political goal.
