

Why the Death of Cultural Christianity Is Great News

Christianity seems to be declining in the West. Nominal Christians have increasingly stopped coming to church or calling themselves Christian at all. Many pastors have lamented this situation. But Australian pastor Mark Sayers thinks this could be a blessing in disguise—if Christians respond properly. He says, “If you look at church history, the things we look back on as the golden days often happened during the darkest times.”