

Christians are caring for Israel's Holocaust Survivors

90,000 Israeli Holocaust survivors will live on little more than bread through the eight days of Hanukkah. They endure the same hunger and loneliness they experienced as children in the camps, fortunately there is a way for Christians to help.

Malnutrition among survivors is severe. Eating irregularly, skipping meals because the government's meager stipend isn't enough. Their diet is below their nutritional needs, causing childhood illnesses to return as hunger weakens their bodies. Living in loneliness, fearing for their next meal, they face their last years without peace or wholeness.
